

Every Chandler has the Traffic Transmission and only Chandler offers it.

Never a care as she drives

Naturally the American woman prefers a Chandler.

She admires the fundamental beauty and distinction of the Chandler-Fisher bodies.

She glories in the smooth and splendid power of the Pikes Peak Motor.

She delights in the sharp but velvet action of Chandler 4-wheel brakes—and takes comfort in the dependability that time has linked with the Chandler name.

But most of all she prefers her Chandler because she knows that the Traffic Transmission enables her to drive anywhere with serene self confidence.

She knows she can never clash gears—never fail to engage the proper gear with expert smoothness whether on hills or in heavy traffic.

She knows that her car is always under perfect control and that she can readily change from high to second or low at any speed!

And so she drives her Chandler when and where she will, with never a care.

(The Traffic Transmission is built complete in the Chandler plant under Campbell patents)

THE SAME OLD STORY

By G. D. McNeil, Superintendent of Schools, Marlinton, in the West Virginia School Journal

(This is the fifth of a series of articles, written by prominent educators of the state upon invitation of the Editor of the State Journal, dealing in a fundamental way, with the fiscal and administrative problems of education in West Virginia.)

To those favoring advance rather than retreat along educational lines it is encouraging to note that newspapers and magazines are giving more space to the discussion of educational problems. This indicates that the public is, at last, taking an interest in this very important and much neglected subject. But in this discussion of the many phases of education there lies a danger—the danger that in the confusion the minor be mistaken for the major, the danger that the question of "technical grammar" of the virtue of intelligence tests be mistaken for the big question, "Shall we have education or not?"

The proofs that America should be educated have been produced so often as to be commonplace. The Hoists visit and the Tax dodgers alike admit that we should have education. The argument then shifts to the question of a standard. What shall we accept as a minimum educational requirement for the average American, and should all, or but a part, of our citizens be educated? If the education of a few will suffice, what a joke the poor could play upon the rich by voting out the Public School system, thereby getting rid of the school tax and forcing the rich man to educate his children in expensive private schools! Then we could impose further upon the rich. Since they had the education, we would of necessity force upon them the additional burden of running the country! But we have 5,000 years of history (from ancient Egypt to the Renaissance) to prove that such a system results always in slavery. We reject the "educate the rich" plan and insist that "Oh, yes! We believe in public education, but—" —If we determine to maintain some system of public education, and are to pay some school taxes, what shall be the standard of education of the average citizen? Can we, with safety trust the country to the millions of voters, the average of these barely able to cipher through division and read in the Fourth Reader? If that is the desired standard, we have it, and all we need do is to maintain the system that we now have. If the fourth grade average is not sufficient, we have but one solution—raise the standard.

Why all the argument? Let us decide calmly just what percent of illiterates we need in America. If we need none, we should decide upon the percent to be tolerated. One illiterate among a hundred persons is much better than our present percent. One percent isn't so very bad a possibility. We might risk ten, or twelve or fifty. And all this illiterate be furnished by my family or shall the unfortunate come from your family? Shall he come from the rich man's family or shall he (does he) come from the family of the poor man whose situation places him just a little beyond the reach of the present system?

Do we desire illiterates among our citizens? Do we regard them as beneficial? If we are to eliminate them, how? Certainly we will not try the four-month term, the twenty-five dollar salary, nor the non-compulsory attendance plans, for these gave us most of the illiterates we have. If we are to eliminate illiteracy, we must educate the illiterates; if we are to have an educated citizenship, we must educate that citizenship.

It is told of the artist, Whistler, that upon occasion he was importuned by a talkative lady to tell her how he painted such beautiful pictures. Whistler replied, "Why, madam, that is very simple. You have but to select the proper colors and put them on in the right place." West Virginia's educational problem is just as simple. All we have to do is to decide what we want, then get it.

Notwithstanding a very small and a very noisy minority, the people of West Virginia want better schools than we now have. Once the point is settled, let us determine upon the changes required to bring our schools to the desired standard. If we cannot agree as to this standard, let us compromise the matter by getting competent authority to decide for us. Never improvements be suggested, which certainly require better facilities. Additional facilities will certainly require more money. Just here at the money problem we stop. If we pursue the usual West Virginia policy of passing the buck. If we are to have schools, it is just as well to face the issue squarely. We shall lose in education and in money if we do not face the issue fairly. If we have schools we must pay for them.

We can build up a greater and more efficient system of education, and we can pay for it without imposing a hardship. We have the wealth—more of it than other states that have solved the problem. We can do what other states have done. But the "backpassing" must stop and a fair scheme of taxation devised.

Those who shout "Better schools and no taxes" will have an excuse for shouting a very long time. If we get education, we pay for it. Why not go to the heart of the matter and make arrangement for this payment? Certainly there can be some fair tribunal found where the tax problem may be settled honestly. Possibly the Governor might appoint a commission to recommend the proper adjustment of taxation. This plan has been opposed upon the ground that no honest and capable commission could be found. That argument is foolish. It is a most miserable situation if there are not five capable and HONEST men in West Virginia. Furthermore, the owners of West Virginia's wealth will not oppose a tax adjustment for educational purposes, provided that adjustment is taken out of cheap politics and placed upon a fair basis. Labor, lumber, coal, oil, agriculture, and the manufacturing will agree that education of

CHEAT MOUNTAIN PROPERTY SOLD

A deed was recorded at Elkins on April 2, conveying the Cheat Mountain club property to seven Clarksburg business men who intend to operate it as a private club. This property consists of the exclusive fishing, hunting and club rights to 50,000 acres of land on the headwaters of the Cheat river, and extends from the Beverly and Staunton turnpike on the north to the headwaters of the Cheat River on the south. The old Cheat Mountain club, which formerly owned and operated this property as a club property, under the management of Messrs. Viquesney, Rector and their associates, became financially involved, and the property was sold, in a creditor's suit to subject the same to the payment of debts, to Citizens National Bank of Belington, and by the latter was sold to William F. Dinkin, Charles B. Johnson, W. M. B. Stone, Hoyd Fleming, Frank McEntee, and Blair Willison, of Clarksburg, and Jake Spiker, of Elkins. The new owners have already taken possession and intend to operate the club strictly as a private fish and game club for the use and benefit of the new owners.—Charleston Gazette the masses is imperative, and these interests will agree to any fair method of adjudication.

We have an educational problem. Let us hit it on the nose.

TAKE A CHANCE

"Take a chance!" a young profane said, as through bleary, boyish eyes he looked at me. The Sunday evening service had closed only a few minutes before. Perhaps a dozen men and women had stood to request an interest in the closing prayer. One of the officials of the church had brought to me a young man "soaked to the skin—the night was a downpour—and brazenly drunk. He wanted money and his story was utterly impossible. He told me that he was the son of wealthy Southern parents; that he had gotten into trouble in New York City, and had lost his money; that his baggage was being held at a prominent hotel for an unpaid bill, and finally that a representative of his family would meet him at the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday afternoon and fix things up! He needed fifteen dollars to meet his immediate necessities, and would repay me "Sure!"

I knew he was lying, and my friend had started him for the side entrance when he burst out. "Take a chance!" What it was that prompted me to give this miserable boy another look I do not know—perhaps the omnipotence of a mother's prayer but I did look at him again. A New York preacher is deceived so often, and by those who tell much more ingenious stories than this had told, that the distrust with which the official of the church received my request to advance him a fifteen dollar account was entirely warranted. "The young fellow went squawking out, half-sobered by my parting words: 'I'll take the chance!' I said, 'as had a chance as any gambler ever took for gold. I'll take the chance; but, boy, for the sake of many another needy fellow who will come to this church for help, as well as for your own, make good, play the man!'"

Let me be perfectly frank. Not every story begins as this one ends—in a return and a remittance; but the boy from the South came back—came back clean and polished—came back with fifteen dollars, and to take me to the Waldorf-Astoria, where I met a gracious Southern lady, who stood there in the stead of the boy's invalid mother, to thank the old Fifth Avenue Church that had gambled with the sin of the city for the soul of her son—gambled and won.—The Christian Herald.

BOOKS HARD TO GET

I remember when my father hauled dressed hogs to Norfolk—17 miles away—and sold them for 2 1/2 cents per pound and had to plead with the merchant for enough cash to pay his taxes. Merchants felt the pinch too. If they trusted farmers for the pay for their goods, very often they had to sue to get it, and then the farmers would get a stay of execution for six months. Lawsuits were frequent but cheap. The constable would serve a summons anywhere in the township for 15c, subpoena 10c, jurors 50c, and justice for trial cost 25c.

Letter postage was 25c and always paid at destination, never prepaid, and no letter allowed to go out of the office without the pay. Very few letters were written. I remember when an uncle of mine wrote his old mother living back in York State, "You must write fewer letters. That last one lay in the office four weeks before I could get 25c together to pay the postage." Then it took five dozen eggs to pay the postage on one letter.—W. D. Zinn in National Stockman.
